Catalogue Course Description:

A philosophical, critical examination of the different ways of knowing and thinking in the humanities, natural sciences, and social sciences including ethical and religious perspectives. Emphasis is on the nature and purpose of philosophical inquiry as applied to selected issues within philosophy and the broader implications of these methods and questions for other disciplines and in everyday contexts.

Instructor's Course Description:

Philosophy 2200 is an introductory course in philosophy that explores a variety of issues from a philosophical perspective. The approach of the class will be historical and comparative. Some of the problems and issues we will be investigating this semester include: the differences between philosophical questions, religious questions, and scientific questions; how values are established and how they change over time; the relationship between faith and reason; the nature of reality; and what ways of knowing do we develop to address these types of questions. These questions (and more) will spin off from a more fundamental question that is the major focus of the course: what is the nature of the human soul/self and its relation to other selves and the external world? We will address Socrates' challenge to know ourselves through various contexts and relationships. Also, students are introduced to the vocabulary of philosophy and how it applies to other disciplines, to the values and objectives of thinking critically, and alternative ways of knowing the self and world through chronologically and comparatively presented worldviews. Ways of knowing our world and ourselves are presented in the context of the following worldviews: Mythic/Primitive, Presocratic, Platonic, Chinese, Modern Western, and Postmodern Western. Historical representatives of each worldview are presented.

Course Objectives:

1. Identify philosophical questions and specific philosophical methods.
2. Analyze important issues and concepts in philosophy.
3. Describe and explain claims made by philosophical thinkers and test these against available evidence with a view to advancing general and transferable critical skills.
4. Learn to identify the fundamental philosophical presuppositions involved in 'ordinary' and 'everyday' experiences and knowledge claims.
5. Create writing indicative of an advanced level of comprehension, argumentation, presentation and writing skills.

Learning Objectives:

PHIL2200 satisfies one of Kennesaw State University's general education program requirements. It addresses the CRITICAL THINKING general education learning outcome. The learning outcome states: Students articulate a position on an issue and support it by evaluating evidence relevant to the position, considering opposing positions or evidence, and evaluating the implications and/or consequences of this issue. For more information about KSU's General Education program requirements and associated learning outcomes, please visit http://catalog.kennesaw.edu/preview_program.php?catoid=14&poid=1248

Course Format:

Philosophy 2200 is an online course. Course content will combine formal online lectures in podcast format and informal online discussions. Students are encouraged to participate actively in discussions and to raise related issues relevant to their lives and experience. Students are expected to prepare all readings in advance of the assignments they are meant to address. Some of the assigned primary texts are difficult, but they will be openly discussed and explained in online podcast lectures and complemented with optional secondary readings.

Final Exam: You will be required to answer 30-50 questions pertaining to the readings and lectures covered in the entire course. This is a comprehensive exam.

Discussion Posts/Voicethread:

Discussion Posts Requirements: You will be graded on your participation and interaction with course materials and other students. In order to receive full marks, you must take part in online discussions for the four (4) modules with Discussion Boards (2, 9, 11, 12). The ‘Introduce Yourself’ discussion board is mandatory for all students and does not count as one of the four. Each discussion post is worth 5% of your final grade.

You are required to write 500 words (min. 450, max. 550), providing philosophical reflection on a significant point or argument from the modules leading up to the discussion board post (for Discussion Board 1 [module 2], use modules 1 and 2; for Discussion Board 2 [module 9], use modules 5, 6,7, and 9; for Discussion Board 3 [module 11], use modules 10 and 11); for Discussion Board 4 [module 13] use modules 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and 12.

You are required to discuss and cite at least the primary reading selected from these modules (for Module 1, there is no primary reading provided. Instead, students are invited to choose one independently). The discussion board posts are graded according to the grading scale in line with the following rubric:

1. Student has successfully identified and explained a significant point or argument in one of the appropriate readings
2. Student has proofread the document for grammar and spelling
3. Student has cited at least one primary text
4. Student has provided a substantial reflection on the significant point or argument identified and explained

Using a secondary text (journal or book) or a piece from social media (newspaper, television show, movie), making sure to highlight how this relates to, contradicts, or supports the significant point or argument identified and explained.

You will be graded on your participation and interaction with course materials and other students. In order to receive full marks, you must take part in online discussions and/or voicethreads for each module as indicated. For every module you fail to contribute to, you will lose 5% of your overall grade.
